Editors Dispatch: Seeing your reply to W. T. Tucker and others in to-day's issue of your paper prompts me to ask "if I can vote in this county.". Although having been a resident and engaged in business here for the past six months, my family still reside in Petersburg, and I pay house-rent there Very respectfully, W. J. B. there. Very respectfully, ANSWER.

A man votes where his domicile is. If he removes to a place animo manendi-that is, with intent there to remain and reside-be becomes a voter there at the end of three months, (both places being in Virginia, of course.) On the contrary, a man's domicile is presumed to be where his wife and children reside. So there is a presumption for and a presumption against your right to vote. If you have fully made up your mind that you will remove your family to where you are, and make your domicile there, you ought to be allowed to vote, we think.
